CONCEPT NOTE

The modern-day boardroom is not just an amalgamation of business leaders strategizing on the finer points of economies of scale, market viability, compliance and enabling bottom-line growth. The industry itself has undergone sweeping transition in terms of the decision-making process and variables that a modern boardroom needs to content with for seamless operation of an organisation. The prime factors that have enabled this transition are digitization and ESG.

Boardrooms today are largely debating on the frontiers of ESG and how organisations can integrate it into their daily business practices to lower the impact on environment, society and enhance their sustainability index. While digitization itself has helped businesses become more efficient, integrated and informed, it has also opened up the avenues for innovation and disruptions that can change the face of business and commerce.

This innovation and disruption form the key to a holistic and result oriented implementations of the concepts on ESG. The modern industry is already delving on the ways and means to harness digitisation and technology to not only make themselves risk immune in VUCA times, but also decipher ways to minimize their harmful impact on the larger ecosystem. For businesses today are largely identified not by their margins but their ability to develop economies of scale through environment friendly and sustainable steps.

It is in this burgeoning discourse on a modern boardroom that is fully integrated with the aspects of digitisation and ESG, that Institute of Directors would like to hear from the industry experts about their approaches to business and decision-making process. The conference will be an ideal setting to not only discuss diverse viewpoints but also create an outlook of a transformational modern boardroom that will embark on a journey from transformational to transformed.
